

NatCen Learning is a leading provider of high-quality learning events delivering the practical insight and skills you need to conduct effective social research.

Established in 2006, we're part of NatCen Social Research, and our events are delivered by NatCen's skilled social researchers. Our goal is to support and develop the quality of UK social research.

“ The course was excellent and surpassed my expectations ”

We offer training based on our methodological, substantive and technical expertise drawn from our experience of a wide range of social policy research and evaluation studies. Participants tell us they leave our events with increased confidence, knowledge and skills feeling proficient to conduct and manage their own social research projects.

Our events use a mixture of taught, facilitated and peer led sessions to enable participants to observe and try out concepts, theories and techniques and understand how to apply them in a practical way. We focus on collaborative learning. Building on knowledge and skills you already have we aim to show you how you can enhance those skills and develop your capacity in new areas.

NatCen Learning offers an annual programme of open courses which provide a great opportunity to network with researchers from across the research community sharing your experiences and ideas. We can also come to your organisation and provide in-house training ranging from bespoke, tailored courses to 'off-the-shelf' modules which we have ready for delivery at a time and location to suit you.

“ Wonderful course, [it] was exactly what I was looking for ... I came away with many things to reflect upon about my work. A very inspiring course! ”

We also offer one-to-one advice, guidance and mentoring to research teams or individual researchers. For more information, availability and updates please check our website: www.natcen.ac.uk/events-and-training
